

ARTICLE APPEARED

ON PAGE

7

NEWSWEEK
24 October 1983

LETTERS

Central Intelligence

During the early 1970s, it appeared that Congress was going to hamstring American intelligence with its public investigations of alleged abuses within the intelligence community (NATIONAL AFFAIRS, Oct. 10). Today, seven years after the formation of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, and its counterpart on the House side, I believe the intelligence community is recovering very well. Bill Casey has played an important role in this recovery and he should be commended for his efforts.

BARRY GOLDWATER
United States Senate
Select Committee on Intelligence
Washington, D.C.